IT'S MEAT, MADAM, MEAT. You've overfed the boy!" yells Mr. Bumble (Tucker Keiser) to Mrs. Sowerberry (Anne Jarrett) as Oliver's unruly behavior has caused him to be shut up in a coffin during a tense but humorour scene from the Daniel Player's current production of "Oliver." The musical, which played to overflow audiences last week end, will be repeated this Thursday, Friday, and Saturday evenings on the John H. Daniel Campus of SVCC at 8:30 p.m.

Health-wise

Lifetime Habits

Hulda Crooks, the 80-year-old California woman who climbed Mt. Whitney for the 15th time last August, is living proof that old age is not synonymous with sickness and disability.

The Loma Linda University research assistant is an enthusiastic advocate of healthful living. She jogs a mile every morning and walks another mile at a brisk pace.

Mrs. Crooks considers her annual mountain climb a demonstration of the benefits of her healthful lifestyle, including vegetarianism, which are available not just to a few exceptional people but to everyone.

Zest for living, a trim figure, resistance to disease—these things do not happen to some lucky people while others were born to be tired, overweight or sick. They are the by-products of learning and following good health habits.

It is true that some people are endowed with more vital energy and are able to abuse their bodies with less immediate results than others; some gain weight more easily than others. But there are laws that govern the way our bodies function which are as inescapable as the law of gravity. To ignore them means sooner or later that we pay the price in lack of energy, disease and shortened life.

The first step toward buoyant health is to discard the illusion that keeping people well is a job for the experts. Hospitals are full of people who have ignored the simple rules of health until distressing symptoms bring them to a doctor. And it is one of the frustrations of the medical profession that patients come with unreal expectations of some kind of magic potion which will cancel out all the abuse to which they have subjected their bodies.

With all the marvels of modern medical science, there is no way to repeal the law which decrees that the wages of smoking, drinking alcohol, poor eating habits, lack of exercise, overwork or insufficient sleep are paid in heart disease, strokes, lung cancer, emphysema, arthritis, diabetes and all the other degenerative diseases that are cutting millions of lives unnecessarily short.

The second step is to become well-informed about the body's needs for exercise, a well-balanced diet, pure water, fresh air, rest.

Two small paperbacks written in simple laymen's terms are a good place to start: It's Your World of Good Health Lessons ($1 each, available from Voice of Prophecy, Box 55, Glendale, Ca. 91209).

Lifetime habits can't be changed instantly but every change will bring its reward in increased well-being and will make the next step easier.
